The University of Michigan Sterilization and Social Justice Lab invites you to a one-day mini-conference convening interdisciplinary scholars who study historical and contemporary patterns of sterilization and are concerned about social and reproductive justice. The goal of the event is to discuss and compare practices and contexts for medical sterilization in the United States, from the 20th century to the present, exploring patterns in sterilization according to gender, race/ethnicity, disability, class, age, sexuality, and medicalization.

Co-Sponsors:
Reproductive Justice Faculty Program at IRWG, Institute for Research on Women and Gender, School of Public Health, Population Studies Center, Center for Social Epidemiology and Population Health, Latina/o Studies Program, Science, Technology and Society Program, Department of History, Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology, Fellowship in Family Planning, and Women’s Studies Department.

Participants:

Sonya Borrero, MD MS
School of Medicine
University of Pittsburgh

Molly Ladd Taylor, PhD
Department of History
York University

Natalie Lira, PhD
Latina/o Studies Dept.
University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign

Liza Fuentes, DrPH MPH
Senior Research Scientist
Guttmacher Institute

Ginny Garcia, PhD
Department of Sociology
Portland State University

Nicole Novak, PhD
Population Studies Center
University of Michigan
Ann Arbor

Film Screening with
Dawn Sinclair Shapiro
The State of Eugenics
Thursday, March 30, 2017
5:30-7:00 pm
1014 Tisch

Dawn Shapiro
Filmmaker and Journalist

Thursday, March 30
12:00pm-5:00 pm
1014 Tisch Hall
435 S. State St.
Boxed lunch available